

Preventing Sexual Coercion Among Adolescents (Part 1)

Satellite Conference

Thursday, February 5, 2004
2:00-4:00 p.m., Central Time

Coercion is the act of persuading or forcing a person into engaging in an unwanted activity through physical force, threat of physical force, or emotional manipulation. Unfortunately, our adolescents face unprecedented pressure in “growing up sexually” and often fall prey to acts of sexual coercion. Statistics tell us that 40% of 15 year old mothers are the result of sex with a partner age 20 or older.

This program is a two-part series designed to discuss adolescent sexual coercion, federal and state patient care requirements and present practical and specific counseling techniques.
